The agreement resulted after the Union challenged Boeing’s interpretation of IRS codes.

Thanks to swift action, vocal leadership and attention to detail, more than 2,000 hours of work was preserved and will be performed by IAM 751 members in Everett who work in the structures lab as part of Boeing Test & Evaluation.

Boeing had proposed having contract workers do this work as part of a demolition of the support structure for 787 structural test set up. The 787 test structure is being removed to make room for a new structural testing lab for the 777X. The agreement was quick to point out that a significant portion of this work is traditionally performed by 751 members.

Credit goes to Union Steward George Stefanini and Business Rep Grace Holland look at the approximately 2,000 hours of demolition work our members will perform taking out the infrastructure, thanks to the union speaking up and stopping a contractor from performing what has traditionally been our work. Because they spoke up and challenged the jurisdiction, our members will perform this work. While a contractor builds and tears down the blue steel support structure for 787 structural test set up, our members install the infrastructure like the exhaust manifolds, catwalks around the airplane and hydraulic actuators. Likewise, as the test lab transitions to a new airplane – demolition of the infrastructure is done by our members with a contractor dismantling only the ‘blue steel’ structure. Continued on Page 4...
Advocating for our members, our industry, our state

By JON HOLDEN
District President

Unionization of Boeing’s workforce is not the only difference between Washington and South Carolina. Here, we utilize our right to bargain to make our members, our communities and our industry stronger.

In South Carolina, Boeing’s workforce deserves this same right, but they must choose to have that voice. Since they are not organized, there is no way for them to advocate on behalf of themselves, the Company and the greater aerospace industry.

While Boeing wants to paint us as always being combative, there have been many issues over several decades where our union has carried Boeing’s water. It is true that the union fights Boeing to improve wages, hours and working conditions for our members. It is true that the union fights to ensure fair and just discipline is applied and members are protected from unsafe working conditions.

It is true that the union fights to ensure all students have access to higher education. It is true that the Machinists Union fights for workers’ compensation and unemployment insurance benefits in our state legislature.

However, there are many things we work on that support the aerospace industry in the state, which benefit both Boeing and other employers, that go unrecognized.

Boeing expressed the need for more resources to be invested by the industry in the state, which benefit both our state legislature and members are protected from unsafe working conditions.

In addition, we lobbied for state resources to be spent to increase the number of engineering slots at both the UW and WSU. Our union backed a proposal to convert the University Center in Everett to an engineering center on behalf of the aerospace industry.

Boeing workforce development is only one aspect of our efforts to keep Washington a leader in aerospace.

The Machinists Union has supported every transportation investment proposal in both the legislature and through the initiative process – again to help Boeing move its freight and to help the workforce in their commute.

For decades, the Machinists Union has supported the Export Import Bank using our time and resources by having members from every local and district across the country lobby Congress in a concerted effort to benefit Boeing.

Machinists Union members across the nation spent over a decade lobbying on behalf of Boeing to build the Air Force Refueling Tanker.

Likewise, we lobbied for Boeing to build the P-8 for the Navy.

For every expansion or renovation to a facility in Washington State (777X, 737, 787), we have lobbied to reduce the mitigation costs, streamline the permitting process and generally make it easier to complete their project.

Upon Boeing’s request, the Machinists Union supported the preferred option for the clean-up plan of the lower Duwamish River.

We also supported the aerospace tax incentives Boeing said they needed to keep jobs in Washington State. Where we differ is our belief that the incentives should be to maintain and grow jobs as opposed to Boeing having the freedom to consciously move thousands of jobs to other states to collect incentives in those states, as well. That is why we continue to push for our aerospace tax accountability legislation.

Time and time again, the Machinists Union worked on behalf of The Boeing Company to make sure they are successful and can continue to thrive in the state of Washington.

This is not simply a choice to help Boeing, but also helps our members and aerospace workers in the state of Washington. It is in our best interests to do so and keep our membership thriving. However, these efforts should be recognized by our community, our state and hopefully Boeing – demonstrating every day that the Machinists Union brings value to the relationship.

The Machinists Union and other unions do good things for our community and our state. It is proven that union membership raises the standard of living for workers in the area and makes our communities a better place to live. Others should acknowledge the value unions bring to our communities and our state.

However, what we get from the Washington State Senate bills that contradict this theory of building better communities.

The Senate Commerce, Labor and Sports Committee, chaired by Republican Senator Michael Baumgartner has introduced several pieces of legislation that oppose the idea of building better communities.

The first is Right to Work legislation, which is purposely misleading and has nothing to do with what the legislation simply aims to destroy the organizations.

Chen elected District 751 Vice President

With Lester Mullen being appointed as a Health and Benefits Representative effective Feb. 1, Les resigned his District Council position and District Vice President position.

As a result, the District Council delegates nominated and voted in a new District Vice President at the Feb. 14 District Council meeting. Local 751-A Delegate Jason Chen was elected District 751 Vice President. NOTE: District 751 bylaws provide when vacancies in the District Vice President or Sergeant-at-Arms position occur between election cycles, the position will be filled by a vote of the seated District Council delegates. Only seated District Council delegates are eligible to run for District Officer positions.

Strike up a good time with food, fun, friends and prizes while raising money for the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League (MNPL).

Local F’s annual Unity Bowl fundraiser will again be held at two locations, in Everett and Federal Way, on Sunday, April 23.

Five-person teams will bowl from 1 to 4 p.m. that day at Secoma Lanes, 34500 Pacific Highway S., in Federal Way, and Glacier Lanes, 9630 Evergreen Way in Everett.

Two locations allow more people to participate close to home,” said Local F President Terr Myre.

Registration costs $55 per person, which includes shoes, lunch and bowling fees, plus a chance at prizes. Sponsorships are available for $100.

All money collected will go to MNPL, which is the political action arm of the Machinists Union.

For details on the Everett tournament at Glacier Lanes, contact Mike Mitchell at (253) 839-6005. For information on the Federal Way tournament at Secoma Lanes, call Christine Fullerton at (253) 709-5786 or Jeremy Coty at (253) 350-1516.

Bill could destroy only group able to fight corporations

Holden testifies against “Right to Work” as more than 1,000 unionists rally

A Spokane Republican’s proposal to force unions to provide services to people who aren’t dues-paying members takes the side of corporations at the expense of our state’s working people, said IAM 751 President Jon Holden who testified before a state Senate committee in February.

“This is not about rights,” Holden said. “This is about destroying the resources and infrastructure of the only group standing between middle class America and poverty.”

“This ‘Right to Work’ bill is only a tool to weaken the bargaining capability of unions,” he said. “There is nothing about ‘Right to Work’ that improves the rights of workers, improves our skill base or provides any additional jobs in the community.

More than 1,000 union members and supporters -- including the District 751 Legislative Committee -- traveled to Olympia to testify and take part in a rally opposing Senate Bill 5092, which aims to make Washington a “Right-to-Work” state.

The bill was introduced by Sen. Michael Baumgartner (R-Spokane), who chairs the Senate’s Commerce, Labor & Sports Committee, which took testimony on the bill during the Feb. 9 hearing.

Some 1,100 people signed in for a chance to speak against the bill. Only one person signed in to speak in support of it.

The crowd packed the committee hearing room -- plus two overflow rooms set up to allow people to listen to the hearing. Hundreds of pro-union activists ended up protesting on the Capitol grounds during the hearing, while others visited their legislators’ offices to object to the anti-union bill.

The bill would forbid unions and employers in Washington State from negotiating a specific kind of contract provision -- called a union security agreement -- and would force unions to provide services to people who aren’t dues-paying union members.

These kinds of laws encourage workers to stop paying for services the unions provide -- like negotiating and enforcing contracts. It would be like allowing people to opt out of paying taxes, but still allowing them to use and benefit from all government services, whether they are taxpayers or free-riders.

The hearing included testimony of several high-profile labor leaders speaking to support the bill in Olympia.

“How to Work” never has and doesn’t now have anything to do with creating or protecting jobs,” said Washington State Labor Council President Jeff Johnsen. “It is the purpose is to curb the power of workers and their unions at the bargaining table and in the Legislature.”

“It doesn’t belong in this state and all of our unions, including building trades unions, are going to stand up and fight against it,” said Lee Newgent, Executive Secretary-Treasurer of the Washington Building Trades. “It doesn’t belong in Washington State now or ever.”

Holden told the committee that “right to work doesn’t work for working people or their families. He pointed to data showing that eight out of 10 of the states with the highest rates of fatal workplace accidents are right-to-work states, as are the eight of 10 states with the highest rates of poverty and eight out of 12 states with the highest rates of childhood hunger.

Unions come together to advocate pro-worker legislation

Hundreds of energized leaders and rank-and-file members of Washington’s unions descended on the State Capitol to meet with their elected representatives on February 8, the first day of the Washington State Legislative & Policy Director Joe Kondo and Legislative and Policy Director Eric González Alfaro, and then it was off to the Capitol. Machinists, teachers, electricians, fire fighters, longshore workers, public employees, laborers, engineers -- workers in dozens of trades, public and private -- were grouped by legislative district to meet with legislators to educate them about the need to working families this session in Olympia, including:

- Fully funding public education -- Our children and teachers have waited long enough for a solution to inadequate and inequitable school funding. But working families don’t want to sacrifice other important state services and priorities to fix this. That means new revenue is needed. Lawmakers must close unproductive tax loopholes and reform our regressive tax code.
- Funding state employees’ contracts -- After years of asking public workers to do more for less, our state faces a recruitment and retention crisis. The modest cost-of-living adjustments in these contracts are an absolutely necessary investment in our public workforce and quality state services.
- Protecting workers’ compensation -- Our safety net for injured workers and their families is under attack. Bills have been introduced to cut benefits, restrict eligibility, and convert our workers’ compensation system into a game of “Let’s Make a Deal.” Business lobbying groups are pushing hard for this, and working families are pushing back.
- Washington Voting Rights Act -- It’s time to provide local governments a process by which they can determine on their own the fairest way to ensure all communities are represented in local elections.

Unions: Hanford workers deserve better from workers’ comp system

Washington State’s labor unions are backing a Tri-Cities legislator’s proposal to reform workers comp rules for Hanford workers.

House Bill 1723, sponsored by Rep. Larry Haler (R-Richland), would remove barriers that prevent seriously ill Hanford workers from getting workers’ comp benefits.

Currently, Hanford workers have to prove that a medical condition was caused by a specific exposure, which is extremely difficult to do because the chemicals they’re exposed to are often unidentified. Under the bill, many conditions would be automatically assumed to be caused by working at the Hanford nuclear facility.

A pattern of denials of Hanford workers’ claims “has had the effect of destroying the health and lives of hundreds of workers and their families at Hanford,” said WSLC President John Kussy, District President Jon Holden, Roy Wilkinson and Chris Schorr -- took part in rallies on Feb. 8 against a proposed “Right to Work” law in Olympia.

We should see “Right-to-Work” legislation for what it really is. It’s about power, not rights

Workers have surprisingly few rights in the workplace. We don’t have First Amendment rights to free speech. To the contrary, employers can hold “coercive audience” meetings where workers are obligated to hear anti-union propaganda. We don’t have Second Amendment rights at work; no Fourth Amendment rights against unreasonable search and seizure; no rights to due process; no privacy rights, no Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination.

Your employer can legally search your belongings, tap your phone, read your email, tell you when and where you can eat, punish you for revealing your salary, and tell you what you can and can’t read on the internet.

Under Washington State law, employers can fire workers for no reason at all. Well… unless you have a union contract. But even with a contract, your union must “demand” (delicious language, isn’t that?) that workers can only be terminated for just cause. Unions must fight for “just cause.” Employers strongly resist granting it.

At their core, Right-to-Work (RTW) laws say workers in America have too much power, and employers have too little.

Inequality is a systemic problem of our time. How do workers get a share of the gains we produce? We can wait for someone to give it to us. We can demand it. Or maybe we don’t get it at all. The classic form of worker power is a strike. However, strikes have just about disappeared. More and more, work stoppages are lockouts, where employers use their power to demand concessions from workers. So, who has too much power?

RTW puts us in a race to the bottom.

I recall a port strike in South Carolina. A state official said South Carolina was proud to have the lowest wages in the country. He would put port strikers in jail to keep it that way. Evidently you Continued on Page 8

Agreement on taxation of education benefits

As a result of the Union working through this process with Boeing, the new language spelt out the following:

Courses taxable over the yearly limit of $5,250 are:
• Any courses that are part of a degree program (all fields)
• Any courses that are part of a certificate program (all fields)
• Any prep courses for a license renewal, registration or examination (all fields) because the U.S. Tax Court ruled that they qualify the participant for a new trade or business.

Courses fully taxable are:
• Individual courses that are considered a sport, game or hobby

Courses not taxable are:
• Individual courses that are not considered a sport, game or hobby. The letter will include instructions on how to recoup any over taxation with a corrected W-2.

“This is an area where the Union felt it was important to challenge the interpretation being used to determine the level of education. We would pay for use of their LTP benefits,” said District 751 President Jon Holdren. “We felt that the interpretation was not capturing the proper designation of taxes above the limit for many different fields of study. I appreciate this new language as an improvement for our members.”

Again, those who are taking individual courses that are game, sport or hobby that are not part of a degree, certificate program or prep course have no reasonable relationship to the business of the employer.

No funding limitations for learning are one of the extraordinary benefits available to only IAM members working at Boeing. It is a benefit that NO OTHER BOEING PAYROLLS have.

Meeting with an IAM-Boeing Joint Programs Career Advisor (1-800-235-3453) is your best choice to access these unique benefits.

The Learning Together Program (LTP) remains unlimited for all IAM employees, thanks to strong language in our contract. LOU 25 specifically states that “unlike Education Assistance, Learning Together has no fund limitations.” LTP benefits changed dramatically for other Boeing employees in 2010 with restrictions on tuition amounts, training institutions, time limits, etc.

Unfortunately, details for District 751 members’ LTP are difficult to find because they are unique and referred to as ‘heritage benefits’ (on the internal Boeing web site http://itr.wd.boeing.com/LTD_CEA/index.cfm)

LTP for 751 members includes:
• IAM members have no annual funding limits
• IAM members do not have to discuss their educational plans with their manager prior to LTP participation, although they are encouraged to do so especially if they work a lot of mandatory overtime to ensure work will not conflict with school.
• IAM members can use LTP benefits at any accredited school. IAM members are not limited to LTP designated strategic fields of study.
• IAM members are entitled to LTP benefits from the first day of their other job. Other Boeing payors are required to have one year of service time before participating in LTP and three years of service before paying MBAA degrees.
• IAM members who complete doctorate, master’s, bachelor’s or associate’s degrees receive restricted stock awards – another benefit that Boeing cut for all other workers in 2010; and
• IAM members can receive reimbursements of eligible expenses while on Educational Leave of Absence from Boeing – a benefit that was eliminated for others in 2010;
• After graduation, IAM members are free to accept jobs outside Boeing – other Boeing workers remain at Boeing for a number of years or else they are required to repay their tuition.

NOTE: With LTP, you are required to get at least a C-grade and sentence structures together on their own using critical thinking and repetition.

Advisors help members find jobs that are a better physical fit to avoid injury

The IAM-Boeing Joint Programs Career Advisors help members a wealth of information and resources in planning their career and education goals, but there is so much more than that. The advisors do so for our members working at Boeing. Nearly every day, these talented individuals go that extra mile to help our members.

Members don’t usually think of talking to a career advisor after they are injured or to see if other jobs might be a better fit – even though that is one service our advisors can provide.

Recently, Everett Career Advisor Gina Fountain assisted two separate members who had been placed on light duty.

The first member was performing a job he knew was not a good fit for him physically. He had been placed on light duty and feared a medical layoff might be in his future. In searching for options, he met with Gina who made recommendations for different job opportunities.

One position stood out to him as the “perfect job” that matched his interests and physical requirements. Starting the new job was not an ERT job, Gina recommended he have his resume professionally written (another service Joint Programs career advisors provide).

After getting his resume professionally written, the job was soon posted on Boeing Careers. At that time, he again contacted Gina for further assistance to enhance his chances in getting the job. Gina made additional modifications to his resume based on the selection questions identified in the requisition. She then helped him upload his resume into Boeing Careers and submit his application.

A couple weeks later, he informed her he had been scheduled for an interview. Gina again was there to assist her member through the interview. At the interview, she reviewed the member’s achievements and accomplishments. The employer was impressed with her member’s resume and was assigned to light duty also turned to Joint Programs. Gina helped the member identify a list of jobs that would be physically a better fit for him. Once the jobs were identified, she put together several training plans and filed multiple ERTs. With her assistance, the member was offered a new position and is now working without the worry that he may become re-injured or medically laid-off.

Just two examples of the services our IAM-Boeing Joint Programs Career Advisors can provide.

It pays to be union is more than just a saying. In Renton, Union Stewards Mike Smith and Richard Holman helped educate management to the fact that just because a member is on light duty, does not by itself exclude a member from overtime. As a result of our union’s efforts, several state members were paid weekend overtime they should have been offered.

Our contract is very clear on who can be excluded from being offered overtime, and there is no mention of light duty. If members are performing the work during the week and there is no medical restriction prohibiting overtime, management should offer them the opportunity to work, the same as the rest of the crew. The Stewards tried to explain this to a Renton manager who refused to listen. The manager even went so far as to put out an unauthorized document stating overtime is not allowed for workers on light duty.

“Union Stewards Mike Smith and Richard Holman did a great job representing our members. When first level management insisted members on light duty are not entitled to overtime, they didn’t take no for an answer and elevated it higher with the promise of writing a formal grievance to correct the matter, if need be,” said Business Rep Robley Evans.

Business Rep Rich McCabe added, “Our Stewards stood their ground with what was the right interpretation of our contract overtime language and ensured the members were paid for weekend overtime they should have been asked to work.

Because the same manager covered multiple buildings, two stewards were involved and worked together to get the matter corrected for their respective members. Our Stewards even brought up the subject at their monthly steward leadership meeting with Vice President and General Manager of the 737 Program Scott Campbell who also confirmed that light duty did not exclude a member from overtime.

“There is a concise list of reasons in our contract why a member can be excluded from overtime and light duty is not one of them. We knew we were correct and ensured the members were properly compensated,” said Holman.

The members were paid for several weekends of overtime and appreciated having our union to protect their contractual rights and ensure they were compensated for the overtime they should have been asked to work per our contract. Just another example of how it pays to be union!

AJAC offers first youth apprenticeship program

The Aerospace Joint Apprenticeship Committee has worked with other state and local agencies to launch the first youth apprenticeship program for high school students in Washington.

The program is being offered to Tacoma students aged 16 or 17, giving them the opportunity to train for jobs in aerospace and other advanced manufacturing fields.

Students will have the opportunity to complete 2,000 hours of paid-on-the-job training while they complete their high school educations.

“This is a great opportunity for students in Tacoma to learn the skills they’ll need to move into family-wage jobs after graduation,” said Jesse Cote, the IAM 751 staff member who is AJAC’s chairman.

District 751 is a strong supporter of AJAC, and played a key role in its formation in 2008.

For the youth apprenticeships, AJAC partnered with the Tacoma School District, Bates Technical College and the Washington Department of Labor and Industries, which approved the plans to establish on-the-job training programs with limited hours and appropriate work assignments for teens.

Interviews for the first class are underway. Cote said the goal is to expand over time through partnerships with more school districts and community colleges statewide.

With Baby Boomers now at retirement age, industry experts say Boeing and its suppliers in Washington State will need 7,200 new aerospace workers in the next five years to replace retiring workers.

AJAC’s goal is to train entry-level apprentices so that they’ll have the skills to replace those shop-floor experts and leaders when they retire from their jobs at aerospace companies that supply Boeing.

Cote said, “Your state is going to remain the world leader for aerospace manufacturing then we have got to prepare a new generation of highly skilled workers.”

Studies show that apprentices, on average, earn $300,000 more over their lifetimes than someone who does not get the advanced skills training. Apprentices also complete their training without the student loan debts that burden so many.

Union stops vendor and ensures our members perform traditional work

Once an airplane is loaded in this unique lab, the structural integrity of the airplane is tested over its lifecycle — predicting how the plane will react in various situations with normal wear and tear.

Last year after extensive discussion, documentation and debate in a jurisdictional grievance involving this shop, Boeing conceded it was indeed our work. This past grievance bolstered our resolution and ensured a much quicker resolution without having to go through a formal grievance.

“Our grievance last year put Boeing on notice that we are watching and protecting our work. That grievance established they cannot outsource this work, yet just a year later they tried again,” said Grace. “We were ready with the documentation from our previous grievance to defend our position on work jurisdiction.”

“I appreciate great Union Stewards like George who defend our jurisdiction and work,” Grace added.

“This is a big deal because many of the 751 members on our crew were on loan because of lack of work. Keeping this 2,000 hours ensures our members will have work in the shop,” said George. “The real problem in this case was the people who proposed using a vendor didn’t know our contract or that it is our work. It wasn’t an intentional move to take our work. They simply moved forward with their idea, until our union challenged their proposal with historical documentation from a previous grievance.”

It was a hard fought battle, but in the end our members will have work in the shop for the foreseeable future!
District 751 is taking part in two annual peanut butter drives sponsored by the central labor councils in Pierce and Snohomish counties.

The drives start this month, and will continue through May 5. Donations can be brought to any IAM 751 union hall in Puget Sound or to monthly local lodge meetings at the Seattle Union Hall.

Peanut butter collected at the Auburn, Renton and Seattle union halls will go to the Pierce County Central Labor Council, which will pool all the peanut butter collected by unions in Pierce County and give it to the Emergency Food Network, which supplies 60 food banks in the greater Tacoma area.

Peanut butter collected at the Everett Union Hall will be contributed to the Snohomish County Labor Council’s fourth annual peanut butter drive, which benefits Volunteers of America’s Everett Food Bank.

“Peanut butter is an excellent source of protein with a good shell life. Organizers encourage union members to buy union-made peanut butter brands like Jif or Adams, and to buy it whenever possible from unionized grocery stores, including Albertson’s, Fred Meyer, Haggen’s, PCC, QFC, Safeway or Thriftway,” said IAM 751 Business Rep Garth Luark, who is leading the Snohomish County Council’s peanut butter drive.

“Our union is committed to making life better for low-income working people in our communities,” said Jason Redrup, an IAM-Boeing Joint Programs coordinator who is president of the Snohomish County Labor Council. “Things like the peanut butter drive are something all of us can do to help meet the immediate needs of hungry families.”

March of Diapers to help Puget Sound families in crisis

District 751’s Machinists Volunteer Program is partnering with the group Many Communities for the third annual March of Diapers drive, which will take place during the month of March.

The drive is an effort to collect disposable diapers and wipes to donate to families living in women’s shelters as well as organizations that support low-income families in King, Pierce and Snohomish counties.

“Without toothbrushes and toothpaste, families who are at much higher risk for having dental problems, which can grow into broader health issues,” said committee co-chair Grace Holland.

In addition, the committees are looking for donations of combs, dental floss, deodorant, Q-tips, foot powder, first-aid items, razors, feminine hygiene products, hand sanitizer, toilet paper (or flushable wipes), sunscreen and socks.

“The leaders of both the city of Seattle and King County have declared a crisis over the rise in local homelessness. A citywide count in January found there were some 4,500 people sleeping on the streets of Seattle, which represented a 19 percent increase over the previous year. Across King County, as many as 10,000 people are either sleeping outside or staying in shelters on any given night. ‘While our elected leaders try to find long-term solutions to homelessness, the rest of us can do our part to help take care of our homeless neighbors,’” said IAM 751 Chief of Staff Richard Jackson, who leads the Human Rights Committee.

“Our MVPs do a great thing by regularly preparing and serving meals for homeless people in Everett and Tacoma,” he added. “This toiletry drive is one more way our union and its members can help address this crisis in our local communities.”

Toiletry donation drive to help disadvantaged and homeless

Our union’s Human Rights and Women’s committees are teaming up to collect toiletry items for homeless people in Seattle. The two committees will collect travel-sized items — including shampoo, toothpaste and deodorant — throughout March and April. Donations will be collected at all IAM 751 union halls in Puget Sound.

“There’s obviously, when you’re living in a homeless shelter, you don’t have a lot of money to spend on personal hygiene items,” said Women’s Committee co-chairwoman Dena Hartman. “This drive will help these people get cleaned up for job interviews, and just help them feel that much better.

“All diapers, pull-ups and wipes collected will go to organizations that support low-income families or families in crisis. Over the past two years, members of District 751 and Machinists Union District Lodge 160 have combined to collect nearly 25,000 diapers and pull-ups, and 9,000 baby wipes.

Machinists volunteers Vennie Murphy, Princie Stewart, Jason Chan, Wilson ‘Fergie’ Ferguson, and Jim Hutchies built a wheelchair ramp for a Tacoma family on Jan. 27. Apprentice graduates are masters of their trades

Fourteen members were honored on Feb. 10 at the annual Apprenticeship Graduation Banquet for their hard work and dedication that earned them the right to be called “journeymen” in their respective trades. For four years, these individuals attended school two to three days a week after working eight hours, learned a new machine every few months and rotated shops. In addition, their progress was regularly reviewed by a group of people. The mixture of on-the-job training and classroom instruction covers courses such as shop theory, trigonometry, physics, metallurgy and machine programming.

Just getting into the program is an accomplishment, which requires meeting stringent criteria, demonstrating certain skills and competing against hundreds, sometimes thousands of other applicants. Many take classes for several years just to qualify to enter the program.

It was only fitting that the event was held at the Museum of Flight, which holds so much aviation history. Like the museum, these graduates also hold a place in history. Five were the first graduates of the Blue Streak Mechanic apprenticeship.

The highlight of the evening was the presentation of the Amie Dulall Achievement Award to Quang Nguyen. This award, named after an apprenticeship-related instructor who taught for more than 40 years, is presented to the graduate receiving the highest marks in both shop work and classroom work over the life of the program.

Jason Campbell, who was among the first graduates from the Blue Streak apprenticeship, spoke on behalf of all graduating apprentices. “Being part of this program is an amazing experience. To be able to work and travel to so many different locations and see all the different aspects of Boeing makes coming to work both exciting and challenging,” said Jason. “Working side-by-side with such incredibly knowledgeable and talented journeymen that have so much passion and integrity for the work they perform has been fantastic.”

“One of the things I really appreciate is that you can pretty much ask anyone at Boeing what they do, and they will gladly share their knowledge and answer any questions you have no matter how simple or complex. You can really sense the pride and the desire to share the knowledge,” Jason added. “I feel fortunate to work at such a great company. We have all grown and will continue to strengthen our skills in our chosen trade with such people surrounding us in the workplace.”

Leaders from both the Union and Company addressed the graduates.

IAM General Vice President Gary Allen congratulated the graduates. “Apprenticeships are a sacred and long-honored tradition within labor. Boeing and the IAM saw the need to invest in employees and develop talent, these graduates are the result,” said Gary. “The gift bestowed on these workers is one that will bear fruit for many years. You should be proud of every one of these success stories.”

District 751 President Jon Holden thanked the instructors, previous graduates and apprenticeship committee members who provided help throughout their journey. He urged apprentices to share what they have learned.

“What makes apprenticeships unique is the tribal knowledge passed from one journeyman to another so remember you will be counted on to share your knowledge with someone just like you. Help keep that legacy alive and continue this tradition,” said Holden. “Just like those we recognized who helped you along the way, you will be called upon to help other new apprentices learn their skills and their trade to secure a bright future for them and ensure this program lives on far into the future.”

“You took advantage of the opportunity for additional education and became a master in your trade. Because of your hard work, you control your destiny and the skills you learned in this program are valued throughout the aerospace industry and around the world,” said Holden. “You have made yourself more valuable as an employee, a union member, a person and to your family by completing this apprenticeship program.”

Special recognition was also given to past IAM-Boeing Apprenticeship Chair Gina Ames who retired in January after 17 years in the position. Ron Storvick, an apprentice graduate in 1997 who has been involved with the program for years, has taken the reins.

“What you fought for and won, is what we are fighting to maintain today,” Holden told retirees during a ceremony that honored 18 IAM 751 Retirement Club members who have been Machinists Union members for at least 50 years.

Retirement Club members have particular influence

Retirement Club Meeting Minutes

The meeting on Feb. 13 was called to order by Vice President Helen Lowe. John Guevarra led the prayer and Vice President Lowe then led the club in the flag salute.

Roll Call of Officers: All officers were present or excused.

Vice President Helen Lowe suspended the Regular Order of Business for a special presentation to members with 50 or more years of service as of July 2016. District President Jon Holden was honored to make the presentation along with District Secretary-Treasurer Sue Palmer. The following were recognized:

Those attending liked having the service awards presented in person (rather than simply mailed out).

The Union will make it a new tradition and extend invitations to retirees to get their awards at the Retirement Club meeting.

Minutes: January meeting minutes were approved.

Executive Board Report: None.

Financial Report: None.

Communications: None.

Legislative Report: Carl Schwartz said we continue to oppose attacks on Social Security.

Resolution to Protect Existing Benefits for Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid

The following resolution was passed at the Feb. 13 Retirement Club Meeting:

Whereas, Social Security is not the cause of and contributes zero to the national debt, because the program is entirely self-funded; and

Whereas, Privatizing Social Security and handing it over to Wall Street ends the guarantee of quality health care at an affordable price and replaces it with vouchers that will not provide sufficient funding and health coverage for seniors and disabled beneficiaries; and

Whereas, Resigning the Medicare Eligibility age from 65 to 67 would deny nearly 5 million seniors insurance starting in 2020. By 2050, most Americans have at least one chronic medical condition that would make the present Medicare private insurance too expensive and difficult to obtain; and

Whereas, Gutting Medicaid by slashing programs, by raising retirement ages, gutting spending for Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, all of which are ‘under attack like never before.’

The Retirement Club passed a resolution calling on members of Washington’s Congressional delegation to oppose various efforts to “reform” the social safety net programs, by raising retirement ages, gutting spending for Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, by raising retirement ages, gutting the social safety net programs, by raising retirement ages, gutting spending for Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, all of which are ‘under attack like never before.’

the millions of seniors and people with disabilities, who rely on the program for their nursing home and health care costs and force states to cut benefits to their most vulnerable people or increase state taxes to make up the difference.

Therefore, be it resolved that as informed and active members of the Machinists Union District 751 Retirement Club, we oppose proposed cuts to Medicare and Medicaid under the budget resolution which would reduce the national debt and reject reforms to shift Medicare costs to seniors or shift Medicaid costs to states and urge Congress in support of our protections for the existing health care benefits and our Social Security system as vital programs for current and future retirees.

FINANCIAL SENSE: Pay yourself first:
Fund your IRA with your tax refund

While most of us don’t intend to short change our retirement savings, competing priorities and unexpected expenditures can often get in the way of consistent retirement saving. An easy way to help fund your IRA is to have your tax refund deposited directly into your IRA. Because this represents money you’ve already paid out, it won’t be missed when you redirect those dollars. And, if the refund dollars go directly to an IRA, you can avoid the temptation to splurge and spend that money on something else if it winds up in your checking account.

Many financial planners advise taxpayers to balance their paycheck withholdings so they break even – meaning they don’t overpay and then receive a refund at tax time. Using this strategy, you can make money that might otherwise be paid in taxes work for you throughout the year and avoid giving the government an interest-free loan. However, if you have trouble saving, a tax refund can be an effective form of forced savings.

Directing your tax refund to your IRA is easy and automatic. If you want your refund to go to just one account, you simply request a direct deposit of your refund on your tax return at the time of filing. If you want the refund to go to multiple accounts (e.g., IRA, checking, savings) you will need to complete IRS Tax Form 8888 when filing your taxes. Completing Form 8888 authorizes the IRS to transfer your tax refund to any number of IRAs or other savings or checking accounts via direct deposit.

While you’ll need to complete Form 8888 during tax preparation time, and with the advice of your tax advisor, here are some tips to help you:

• You must have an IRA already established at a financial institution in order to have your refund directed to this account.

• You need to follow up with the financial institution that holds your IRA and specify which tax year your payment is for. Many providers will assume the payment is for the current calendar year unless you specify otherwise.

SCOTT WEALTH MANAGEMENT GROUP of Wells Fargo Advisors

• If you want your deposit to be credited as a prior year IRA contribution, you must verify that the deposit was actually made by the tax filing deadline for that particular year – generally, April 15.

Keep in mind that even if you already contribute to your retirement savings through a 401(k) or other employer sponsored plan at work, you are still eligible to contribute to an IRA to supplement those savings. With corporate pension plans on the decline and Social Security making up a smaller share of most Americans’ retirement income, it’s important to take charge of your own retirement savings. Having all or a portion of your tax refund directed into an IRA is an easy way to help save for retirement. A Financial Advisor can help evaluate where you are on the path toward saving for retirement to help ensure you can live out your unique vision.

Members briefed at meeting at the Spokane Union Hall

Machinists laid-off from Triumph Composite Systems in Spokane will have the opportunity to train for new careers, thanks to their union. The laid-off workers were briefed on benefits available to them under the federal Trade Adjustment Act (TAA) during a meeting at the Spokane Union Hall Feb. 9.

Laid-off Triumph workers are eligible for Trade Act Benefits under the current petition that expires on March 19. A new petition has already been filed and will hopefully be certified soon to ensure any laid-off Triumph workers (including SPEEA, on site contractors, etc.) have the option for TAA benefits.

Some 72 Machinists have been laid off from Triumph, out of a workforce of 400 hourly workers. A handful of others have been issued 60-day WARN notices. The company cut their jobs after it moved some of the Machinists’ work to Mexico.

But because their work was sent overseas, the laid-off workers qualify for federal job re-training assistance. District 751 and the Washington State Labor Council successfully petitioned the U.S. Department of Labor to provide them with the aide. These “Trade Act” benefits can include:

• Up to two years of free training for a new career at a college or other training provider;
• Payments similar to unemployment insurance benefits while workers are retraining;
• Tax credits for health insurance;
• Allowances for job search expenses and to cover the cost of moving to take a new job; and
• ATAA an older worker wage subsidy program.

Bill Messenger, a representative of the state Labor Council, met with about 40 laid-off workers to go over the specifics of the program. “The only good news here is that—because they have the support of their union—our members will be eligible for two years of job retraining benefits and financial support,” IAM 751 President Jon Holden said.

“Obviously, everybody would rather keep their good union jobs at Triumph,” Warren said. “But one of the benefits of being part of our union is that we’re going to look out for everyone, and do all we can to make sure that anyone who is laid-off can find new opportunities for themselves and their families, even if they aren’t Machinists Union members anymore.”

Laid-off Triumph workers interested in using the Trade Act benefits should contact the Spokane Workforce Resource office at 130 S. Arthur St., telephone (509) 532-3000.

Ex-Virgin America workers to join IAM&W with Alaska Airlines merger

Nearly 800 clerical, office and passenger service employees with Virgin America airlines will become members of the Machinists Union.

The agreement between Alaska Airlines and IAM District 142 means the International Association of Machinists & Aerospace Workers now represents at total of 1,000 clerical, office, fleet and passenger service, reservations and stores employees at the combined Alaska-Virgin airline.

The two airlines completed their merger in December. This agreement was announced on Feb. 18.

The agreement standardizes pay for all workers and extends the benefits of union representation to the former Virgin America workers, who have not been union members before.

The agreement also specifies that once the merged airline establishes its new reservations center, the workers there will be represented by the IAM as well. “We are excited to welcome nearly 800 new members into the IAM family,” said IAM&W General Vice President Sito Pantoja. “This transition agreement will ensure that all members at Alaska will be working under the same contract, providing equal protection and benefits to all.”

The IAM&W is the largest union for airline workers in the world.

Still no confirmed buyer for Triumph

Rumors continue to swirl about potential buyers for the Triumph plant in Spokane, but to date, there is no confirmed information regarding any deal.

“We’re keeping in close contact with management at the plant. As soon as we know a decision, the union will communicate with the members immediately,” said IAM 751 Business Rep Steve Warren. “Obviously, our members are interested in knowing about how this will affect them and their working lives.”

Warren said he doesn’t expect there will be any deal announced until late April/early May, at earliest. Triumph announced in November that it would seek a buyer for the Spokane plant, which it has owned since 2002, when it bought the plant from the Boeing Co.

The company is going through a major restructuring, which has led it to close and consolidate a number of plants. The Spokane plant is considered a profit center for Triumph and would be attractive to any number of potential owners, Warren said.

“We’ve got an experienced and highly skilled workforce,” he said. “It’s my hope that Triumph is able to find a buyer that can grow upon what we have here by bringing in new work.”

Local 86 members who work at Triumph produce about 10,000 environmental control system, flight deck and composite interiors assemblies and 9,000 floor panel assemblies each month. The plant and its workers have the capacity to produce roughly double that, Triumph says.

IAM unionizing volunteers meet with Jubilant workers

District 751 volunteers hand out information about our union at the front gate of Jubilant HollisterStier in Spokane, where workers have expressed interest in joining the Machinists Union. If you know anyone who works for the company — either as a manufacturing worker or scientist — please call our Unionizing Department at (206) 764-0305.

Talks continue on first contract with Spokane Valley Fire Department

Negotiators with the Spokane Valley Fire Department (left) and District 751 got started in February, with a goal of having a first contract for union members — who maintain the department’s vehicles and equipment — to vote on in March.
